Getting people to actual be involved can be an uphill struggle. Check with the fridge's owners directly — guidelines are generally posted on web sites or social media — to find out what users need most. It also features guidelines to help funders develop and evaluate applications that seek NORC program support.

A guide to community fridges, from volunteering to starting your own

The are often credited to European food-sharing initiatives, like the program started in 2014 in Berlin, Germany. If you are struggling to stock a fridge using only the power of volunteers and community donations, check out community fridge microgrants, offered by already established fridge networks to help fund the creation of new ones.
