Cambridge Authors » Music and Meaning (4): Living in 'The Palace of Art'

Ere young night divine Crowned dying day with stars, Making sweet close of his delicious toils, She lit white streams of dazzling gas, And soft and fragrant flames of precious oils In moons of purple glass Ranged on the fretted woodwork to the ground. . In using this scriptural allusion, Tennyson both presents God's judgment of the aesthete who selfishly abandons his or her social responsibility and places the psychological action of the poem in a broader political context.

The Palace of Art

When I first conceived the plan of the Palace of Art, I intended to have introduced both sculptures and paintings into it; but it is the most difficult of all things to 'devise' a statue in verse.

While it can be understood as a lament for masculinity in peril, it can also be interpreted as expressing regret for the mariners' indulgence in forbidden. Some were all dark and red, a glimmering land Lit with a low round moon, Among brown rocks a man upon the sand Went weeping all alone.

Essay: Alfred Lord Tennyson's the Palace of Art

Unlike many who remained deeply suspicious of art and literature, Tennyson obviously does not abandon art and poetry here but wants to save the Palace of Art for the masses — a major Victorian project to which , , and many others devoted their lives. Are there flaws in this work by a literary giant? Illustration negotiated text and image on the printed page, while narrative painting juxtaposed the two media in its formulation of pictorial stories.
