Debating the Archaeological Heritage by Robin Skeates

Since their own research will not be adversely affected, they have nothing to lose.

Archaeology: The Widening Debate

Throughout the world, competing interest groups lay claim to the material remains of the past.

Who Owns The Past?

Controlling and preserving culturally significant archaeological materials and shaping the discourse around their history are the other primary issues of indigenous archaeology. I believe that returning the item to them does not have to mean that the item is being returned to its owner, rather the item can be given to these people since that have the most connections to the item in question. Whether the archaeology, potentially a major tourist attraction if and when the region stabilizes, can be protected and managed while allowing mining to take place is a matter of current debate.

The Conservation and Management of Archaeological Sites

To his mind, heritage is fuzzy and intangible, and therefore more easily manipulated by source nations and their champions. Legislation around the stewardship and preservation of archaeological and cultural sites is perceived to be similarly biased as well. The Canadian experience follows a similar trajectory, albeit at a slower pace.

Heritage Debates

There have been substantive advances in the approaches to the conservation and management of earthen architecture.

The Conservation and Management of Archaeological Sites

Domestic commitments to honourable negotiation e. Violent upheavals such as the ongoing wars in Afghanistan, Pakistan and Iraq, all sites of remarkable ancient treasures, fuel the market.

Nina Swidler; Kurt Dongoske; Roger Anyon; Alan Downer eds. The audience of academics and heritage specialists heard from panel members Graham Bell, Europa Nostra Council and Director North of England Civic Trust, Izzy Mohammed, Audience Engagement Coordinator, Library of Birmingham and Dr Rhiannon Mason, Senior Lecturer in Museum, Gallery, and Heritage Studies. Even the most cynical and opportunistic lawmakers would not want to be observed supporting self-evidently absurd demands.
