I should first like to express my deep appreciation for the gracious invitation extended me by President Spitz to serve as your essayist. The biography highlights unusual experiences through two decades before, during and after World War II in Europe: early years in Austria and Hungary; a stint as a teenage soldier in the German army; and formal education in Austria and Switzerland. I want them to have role models like Daniel and Joshua; not Justin Bieber.

This method of conversion has had far-reaching effects worldwide as many have claimed this as the basis for their salvation. In the light of this concern, I am ordering my convention essay along three main lines: first, a word about the genesis of contemporary born again theology and its perception of justification by grace through faith; second, a - reminder of how this doctrine is articulated in our own tradition; and third, a suggestion of the main difficulties which emerge when the two models are joined.
