And such differences originated from diverse regional histories and cultures. Manipulating Korean Military Posts The mobile frontier, of Korean officials seeking to impress civilized forms of behavior upon Jurchen elites as the guests proceeded up to and down from the king and to and from the capital, may not have been as successful as Korean officials hoped. Neither did it prevent the Chosŏn court from permitting Jurchens residing north of the Tumen River, in Ming China, to engage in interactions with the Korean government.

The merchants of Ŭiju and their associates were most active in taking advantage of commercial opportunities in connection with the Qing trade, as already discussed.

Scandals Emerge About Han Kuo

Thus, these examples of palatalized words would seem to indicate that t-palatalization had made inroads into Hwanghae Province around 1730. He asks us to grieve with him over the harsh reality that prevented him from making use of his ambition and talent. When the highest-ranking Korean official present was a military official pyŏnjang of the fourth rank or higher, he sat in the east, the Tomanho sat at west, and the Manho and Jurchens holding Chinese military posts sat at south.
