SOLOMON BEN JEROHAM

The soul requires the good acts of the body to perfect its peculiarly immaterial, celestial-like substance, even as the body needs the faculties of sensation and reason which the soul provides. This warning is given by the divine providence to mankind at large; but as it is perceived only by those whose intellect is fully developed, the divine providence benefits individuals only.

Levi ben Gershon

Thus a man of a highly developed intellect may foresee the accomplishment of a certain miracle which is only the result of a providential law conceived and executed by the active intellect. If they are foreknown how can they be contingent? He also translated into Arabic and commented upon the Karaite prayers St. He was the grandson of Isaac ben Reuben of Barcelona Simeon ben Zemah Duran, Responsa, i.

Zerachiah replied in kind, writing objections to the Ravad's work Baalei Ha-Nefesh which were full of sarcasm and personal attacks. Of all the Jewish Peripatetics he alone dared to vindicate the Aristotelian system in its integrity, regardless of the conflict existing between some of its doctrines and the principal dogmas of Judaism.

Their wealth and fame opened the door to high society circles and to the court as it was the case of the de la Cavalleria who adopted Christianity. This special soul, which is a direct emanation from God, existed before the creation of the world. The sublime thought of God, he says, embraces all the cosmic laws which regulate the evolutions of nature, the general influences exercised by the celestial bodies on the sublunary world, and the specific essences with which matter is invested; but sublunary events, the multifarious details of the phenomenal world, are hidden from His spirit.
