Clovis

The earthwork would then be constructed, and often a new mortuary structure would be placed atop the new earthwork. These mounds varied in size, shape, design and purpose. A typical house was built in a circle form from 15 to 45 feet in diameter.

Adena Culture

Some archaeologists believe that Adena and Hopewell shamans used smoking pipes to consume hallucinogenic substances, facilitating communion with dead ancestors or spirit beings. It is the largest conical burial mound in , and remains virtually intact.

The Adena Culture of the Northeast

It is replaced frequently in tree growth and makes for a better indicator of when the mound was first created. How did these early people live? The radiocarbon range of the Boucher Site is 885—114 BC, and at least 15 Adena-style tubular pipes from the site were made of Ohio fireclay Ibid.

The Adena Culture of the Northeast

The Adena settled in hundreds of small villages along the Ohio River. The original or primary mound had been built of river sand to a height of between 3 and 4 feet, covering the remains of a single female burial—numbered as burial 26 by excavator Frank Gerodette. Some people were part of the Adena culture.

Symbolism of the Great Serpent in the Adena and Hopewell Cultures

The sample included 4 out of the 5 documented Native American lineages haplotypes. Not everyone was buried in this way, but only a select few.
