The Roma People in Europe : A Story of Marginalization and Exclusion

Some World Bank studies also include. The initiative has helped to develop a group of female leaders within the community, who have begun to self-organise trips to other parts of Scotland.

The Roma in Romanian History

Equality, tolerance and the acceptance of differences are its guiding principles. The need for renewed attention to this minority is self evident as most of Europe's Gypsies live in countries which have recently become members of the Council of Europe. From May 2004 to September 2005, 7,326 citizens from new Member States applied for a residence permit for labour market reasons Hagos, 2005.

History of the Romani people

Gypsies should be recognised as a non-territorial minority. To understand the Roma problem, it is important to look at this itinerancy, which is characterised by continuous adjustment and adaptation to a changing environment. Therefore, in general, we use the term 'Roma' in this issue, apart from historical usage or a group who specifically refer to themselves as Gypsy.

The forced dislocation of gypsy people from the town of Bayramic, Canakkale in 1970

As imports grew and exporters failed to respond to opportunities in world markets due to the poor quality of their products and lack of resources for investment, the trade deficit expanded, putting downward pressure on the exchange rate.

Mission Frontiers

Finally, RECC held regular community events, often with Uphall school, to bring Roma parents together with other parents in the local area. The focus of the seven contributions is on the evolving role of the city as a commercial link between Europe and North Africa, and on the changes in the ethnic composition of its population over time. A local councillor set up a petition about addressing anti-social behaviour which some of our interviewees claimed deliberately targeted Roma.

Migration data in Europe

Over the decade 1994 to 2004, the transition economies had closed some of the gap in income per person with the average for the European Union in purchasing power parity terms. Even when they started to receive applications, most were a device for staying in the country prior to an attempt to get to Western Europe rather than being genuine requests. In order to build stronger relationships with Roma parents, the school started up a breakfast club attended by interpreters.

The Roma in Romanian History

Waiting for Roma to make contact with mainstream provision is therefore likely to be costlier than addressing exclusion at the early stages. The existing data are the product of ad-hoc collaborative studies and are not likely to represent the true spread of Romani founder mutations.
