Commercial History of Ireland

This was crushed by a Gaelic prince called Tuathal, and there followed a great historic event, the formation of a united kingdom of Meath and Connacht, which provided Ireland for centuries with a central High kingship. In my view, these crimes, connected with the social state of that country, which have now gained such force and front, have been operating with more or less force for the last eighty years.

Of anything previous to the Revolution—of the treachery and blood, by law and without law, under the Plantagenets, Tudors, Stuarts, and the Commonwealth—'tis needless to speak. Quite apart from the courage, comradeship and discipline displayed, the Sutherland Highlanders earned widespread praise because, in the words of Colour-Sergeant J. To me he is principally indebted for the success and establishment of his paper.
