This most recent version is particularly good and apes the Farlowe version well, right down to the Beach Boys-esque backing vocal. Some of the highlights include the tranquil by the original incarnation of Fleetwood Mac and by Thunderclap Newman. Ultimately, the film affirms these dreams, the power they give Tristan to transcend his banal reality, even if he is so lost in them, he has no more purchase on any kind of reality.

Many were appalled, and he received death threats. The Best: Danny Williams — : Not for the last time I found myself torn between a song that pushes the boundaries of pop and a simple, much-loved standard. Then The Rolling Stones made their debut, and became so popular, they got a blues cover to the top! If, like me you are very familiar with BREATHLESS but didn't love the film I know this sounds like heresy to many Cinephiles, then it's more interesting.
