Clinical laboratory technologists and technicians need to be skilled with their hands. In many cases, cytotechnologists may earn a BS from one institution that is followed by a CAAHEP-accredited cytotechnology certification program. These professionals can examine slides and mark any type of cellular changes that they notice which could be an indication of a disease.

Becoming a Certified Cytotechnologist

RESULTS A total of 1,426 articles and 23,565 cited references from the three source journals were analyzed: 790 articles with 13,295 citations from Acta Cytologica; 56 articles with 1,404 citations from Cancer Cytopathology; and 580 articles with 8,866 citations in Diagnostic Cytopathology. It should be noted that employers normally prefer candidates who not only have completed accredited programs, but those who are nationally certified as well.

The results also indicated a strong reliance on recent literature. Currently the demand for experienced cytotechnologists is on the rise and that will continue to be the case for this job type for the next 20 years. This has greatly enhanced the ability to find and diagnose tumors located in previously inaccessible sites.

Cytotechnologist

It is one of only 27 accredited schools in the country and one of only two in Pennsylvania.
