Sources of Japanese Tradition

Before the Manchurian Incident: Germination of Fascistic Physical Education and Sport Background The Meiji Restoration in 1868 brought a drastic change in Japanese history. In 1922, with the visit of American birth control advocate Margaret Sanger 1879—1966, reproductive control was taken up by feminists as a way of helping all women, but especially poor and working-class women. For their part, peasants who made up 80 percent of the Japanese population were forbidden from engaging in non-agricultural activities, thus ensuring consistent income for landowning authorities.
