And I untightened next the tress About her neck; her cheek once more Blushed bright beneath my burning kiss: I propped her head up as before, Only, this time my shoulder bore Her head, which droops upon it still; The smiling rosy little head, So glad it has its utmost will, That all it scorned at once is fled, And I, its love, am gained instead! A hundred shapes of lucid stone! His burial took place at Westminster Abbey and he is buried alongside Alfred Tennyson. In the midst of the lights and the laughter, she sees her lonely lover sitting dejectedly in his cold and cheerless cottage, thinking of her. There is scarcely one of the poems published at this time which can be read without fixing itself at once in the memory as a forcible and pungent presentation of a characteristic mood.

Analysis of The Laboratory by Robert Browning

Love in Browning is often love at first sight; no prolonged acquaintance is necessary; not even a spoken word, or any physical contact.

The Literary Love Story of Elizabeth Barrett and Robert Browning

All the neighbour-talk with man and maid--such men! This made his reputation go downside. If Shakespeare could sing with myriad lips, Browning could stammer through a thousand mouths.
