Council for British Archaeology

The group identified the twin needs as a comprehensive listing of data about existing archaeological sites region by region, and the creation of a network of field archaeology units, who could carry out excavation in advance of development, all funded by central government. Quaternary Mercer, J 1974 'Glenbatrick waterhole, a microlithic site on the Isle of Jura'.

Communications with areas to the west and east were enhanced by the fact that land routes could skirt around the northern end of the Clwydians. This directorial experience encouraged imaginative use of earth moving machinery, and, more importantly, showed that few sites were limited to the periods and features initially expected.
