Third World Women and the Politics of Feminism by Chandra Talpade Mohanty, Paperback

Motherhood Studies responds in part to the new monism described by Douglas and Michaels, whose work informed my essay. The spread of cable TV, which brought distant UHF stations and kid-specific channels like Nickelodeon, Disney, The Cartoon Network, Fox Family, and MTV into the home, made targeting mothers and kids much easier, and more incessant. Either is more than OK.

Third World and Third World Women

From day one, women in this kind of society are conditioned to be complacent, this process is instigated on the sides of both genders, and parenting plays a primary role in perpetuating it.
