Subfertility or Infertility

Infertility, defined as the inability to conceive after one year of unprotected intercourse, affects 15 percent of couples. There may be significant variation in outcomes of different treatments in specific subpopulations. Reference values of semen variables.

Subfertility or Infertility

While fertility in women with trisomy X is generally considered normal, there is an increased risk for premature ovarian failure. Survival curves were calculated for proportion of conceptions over number of menstrual cycles. We recently proposed this threshold for timing the first infertility investigation in selected groups of couples after six cycles with fertility-focused intercourse ; to avoid over- as well as under-treatment.
