The kings of the house of Wessex could project their power a long way: Æthelred the Unready could use his naval power to reach as far as Cumbria, Man or the Cotentin. We find a telling example of this in the Gesta Stephani Regis Anglorum whose author wrote, Est autem Scotia, quae et Albania dicitur, regio locis plaustribus circumsepta, silvarum fertillium, lactis et armentorum copiosa, portubussalubribus, insuli opulentis; sed incolas barbaros habens et impuros, nec nimio frigore fractos, nec aspera fame detritos, citis pedibus levique armaturae confidentes. Henry III hardly ventured so far for such a purpose.

PHILIP JENKINS

It was not so much that the British people had ceased believing in themselves; it was more that over a very short period the conditions of that belief had evaporated. Williams 1974 identified him as a pseudonym of Captain Allen F.
