In this episode Zarathustra tastes the joys of solitude for the first time in 30 pages - he has met several travellers, all of whom eventually join his band of 'Higher Men' but whose presence for the moment constitutes a nuisance - and it is worth making the point that all his remarks in the Nietzsche are addressed by himself to himself. And for us post-Kantian moderns, for whom the beehive of knowledge is where our treasure is, this figuring-out is going to involve offering reasons and making arguments. Despite his offer coming at a time when he was considering giving up philology for science, he accepted.
