The debate has not been resolved; if the poem is a later composition, it figures al-Shanfārā as an archetypal heroic outlaw, an anti-hero nostalgically imagined to expose the corruption of the society that produced him. Its structure, motifs, and images constituted a literary model for Umayyad, Abbasid, Fatimid, Andalusian, and Mamluk poetry, and its grammatical and lexical usages formed a tool to understand the Qur'ānic message and to measure the purity of later Arabic expressions. The poem also gained a foremost position in Western views of the Orient from the 1820s onwards.
