A recent Festschrift has been devoted to Fouad Zakariyya by his students from Kuwait University. In the same vein, Zakariyya argues that Islamism has been on the rise in many Gulf States, and that it has principally turned a deaf ear to the misuses of Islam in the public sphere. This system may be deficient in many ways; however, these deficiencies have absolutely nothing to do with what our author says.

However, what is not understandable is that Óanafi turns a blind eye to these clear orientations and does not derive the necessary lessons from such a religiosity and the forces behind these groups.
