Urban trees, air quality, and asthma: An interdisciplinary review

As the years wore on and the rail system grew rapidly, many Victorians saw in the railroad the reflected image of the technical and moral progress they so cherished.

Fragmentation and Cohesion in American Society*

Looked at in this way, fragmentation implies malaise and demoralization. The analysis can then proceed with the aim of identifying patterns in space and time.

Urban flood prediction under heavy precipitation

The American imagination has traditionally been drawn to wild spaces rather than to the symbiosis between food and land represented in the French term

Urban and Rural Areas

How close ran machines to using the discretion and judgment of the wise human being? Naylor Fitzhugh, Howard University Marketing Professor, an associate of the Moss Kendrix Organization who became vice president of PepsiCo, and Raymond S. In general terms, the bid rent theory holds that commercial uses will compete more intensively for space in central areas, resulting in higher density and higher cost housing forms as residential uses are forced to bid against non-residential uses for scarce land.
