Only the limited number of people can be admitted for each tour. The villa and garden are a visual ode to rustic simplicity. To reach the Villa from Kyoto, we took Hankyu-Kyoto Line, direction Tengachaya, to Katsura Station and walked for about 14 minutes.

Katsura Imperial, Zen Buddhist Villa

The small structures were built to incorporate qualities that are at the essence of the tea ritual, such as harmony, silence, and reverence. The Katsura zen villa is built on stilts allowing to avoid the floods of the Katsura river.

KATSURA LA VILLA IMPERIALE

She shared history of the villa, which was commissioned by Emperor Goyozei's brother, and discussed the various structures, such as tea houses, that we visited on the property. Finally, the interior of the buildings were planned so that the designers imparted their reverence for the materials and spatial harmony, which are intended to promote reflection that will achieve inward simplicity and tranquillity of the mind.

KATSURA LA VILLA IMPERIALE

I noted gardeners working on the meticulously maintained landscape and a big heron, looking for morsels in the water. . Large openings punctuate the length pierced galleries or corridors.
