Pope also relegated to the foot of the page any passages he decided were weak, especially Shakespeare's increasingly unacceptable puns and conceits. The share also altered as the number of sharers varied, going from one-tenth in 1599 up to one-eighth when Will Kemp left and down to a twelfth and a fourteenth as further sharers were brought in. The king gave the company £30 to tide them over while they could not perform.

Macbeth: Summary & Analysis Act I Scene 5

As Antony Scoloker commented in 1604 in the epistle to his poem Diaphantus: a good poem should be 'like Friendly Shakespeare's Tragedies, where the Commedian rides, when the Tragedian stands on Tip-toe: Faith it should please all, like Prince Hamlet' Chambers, 2. However at the end, the speaker pleads her pain and waits her judgment.
