Child protection system for England

The cardinal principle of the Act is that the welfare of the child is paramount when an issue concerning the upbringing of a child has to be decided by a court under this legislation. Children who are removed from their parents may need the support they get from other relationships, either with people in their family or ex-foster carers, or friends and teachers they were at school with.

Legislation

Meanwhile, over the past five years, the number of children in care has soared.
