The growing likelihood of the dissolution of the USSR itself led hardline elements in the CPSU to launch the in 1991 which temporarily removed Gorbachev from power. Lev Kamenev delivered a long and effective speech on December 21, first taking down hecklers with cutting comments from the lectern before launching into an attack on Stalin's earlier moderate tone towards the rich peasantry and characterization of the industrialisation-oriented Left Opposition as the greater threat to stability of the Soviet state. As a result, in October 1937, he was removed from his position on the Central Committee, stripped of party membership, and arrested by the , the Soviet secret police.
