4 things parents can do to support their children with learning disabilities during lockdown

The most commonly used specialist tool is the Parents Assessment Manual PAMs McGaw, 1998. One way to do this is to read or play tapes of biographies in which children or adults have had to struggle to achieve their goals - adventures where the characters got lost or had to fight sharks or other beasts; stories of achieving despite illness or disability; or stories of fighting prejudice or unfairness.

Parents with learning disabilities

Different is not bad, different is the world. How new parents respond to this new little person is influenced by many factors. This is humiliation, and it has no place in any classroom or home.

Parenting A Child with Intellectual Disability

This can make communication very difficult. This tool provides a comprehensive assessment of parenting capacity identifying strengths, as well as areas where further support is needed, by observing parents undertaking a range of tasks.

What Parents Can Do to Help Children with a Learning Disability

Subscribe to age-related magazines that will keep your child updated on current clothing, movies, music, etc. A parent may move from stage-to-stage in random.
