William Styron, James Baldwin, and Confessions of Nat The Dream of a Common History on JSTOR

The book gives an inside look into the lives of two very different individuals, Sophie, a Polish woman and an Auschwitz survivor, as well as , a man who is a paranoid schizophrenic and growing more mentally unstable. By focusing on the contextual rather than the theoretical aspects of works, The CEA Critic provides a refreshingly sharp academic and practical perspective for teachers and scholars alike.

The Confessions of Nat Turner

The expression of grief, and the consequences of bottling up emotions are displayed with both of these characters. Styron's experience with having his work filmed for both television and the cinema is documented by screenplays of The Long March and Sophie's Choice. A separate index to some of the letters by well-known authors and celebrities accompanies the collection.

William Styron

The collection consists of correspondence; writings by Styron and other authors; printed materials including serials containing articles by and about Styron and his work as well as newspaper and magazine clippings ; audiotapes, videotapes, and photographs; legal and financial papers; speeches and addresses; interviews; scrapbooks; and other material relating to Styron's personal life and his career as a writer.
