Afro Combs

She is excited to be part of the African Combs project where she hopes to increase her knowledge of African collections and community collaborations and share experiences with all those involved.

'Kena Hetuna, Open and Closed'

In 2008 she obtained an MPhil in Criminological Research from the University of Cambridge, studying the impact of accessing African and Caribbean cultural heritage in a prison environment. Henry Drewal, Department of Art History; Design Gallery, School of Human Ecology, University of Wisconsin-Madison Afriya, 2010, acrylic on linen, 125. A wonderful opportunity to re-interpret a vast array of combs from across the African continent.

What's On: What's On

Ifè-Oni is a photographer, filmmaker and graphic designer, whose interests in photography started over 25 years ago and he has exhibited his work in a number of exhibitions. Statement Moving from one country to another is like passing from one age to another: one's own and that of the host country. Pamela Clarkson and Atta Kwami are painters and printmakers who spend their time between their homes and studios in Loughborough, UK and Kumasi, Ghana.

Exhibition Opening / The Good Life

A link to the design of strip-woven cloth is inevitable. She is currently writing two books: Black history, identity and culture in English Prisons, and Origins of the Afro Comb. Hence the abstracts of Kwami speak as eloquently of the organic lines and spaces of west African architecture as they do of the formal values associated in modernism with the two-dimensional canvas.
