Series Title: Responsibility: edited by Melanie Klein, Paula Heimann, R. In the second stage the infant begins to apprehend that the gratifying objects he needs and loves are but other aspects of the menacing and frustrating objects he hates. However, in so far as he can tolerate the depressive position, it gives rise to reparative impulses and a capacity for unselfish concern and protective love.

New Directions in Psychoanalysis

The first, issuing from the infant's unintegrated and violently conflicting attitude to the vital objects of this world, is marked by a persecutory anxiety which may retard or disrupt the integration of the infant's ego. Special reference is made to aspects of grief, mourning and loss in relation to depression. Roger Money-Kyrle 1898-1980 was an influential psychoanalyst particularly noted for his promotion and development of the ideas of Melanie Klein.
