Lynch, Tristram Shandy Bibliography

A dense narratological reading of Tristram Shandy, derived largely from Genette, but with references to Miller, de Man, and other post-structuralist critics. So intense is the desire of the city's matrons to touch the nose that Diego remounts his mule and rides on toward Frankfurt. Toby finally works up courage to enter the widow's house.

Slop;—once as he was falling,—and then again when he saw him seated. A certain existential and historical perspectivism is always at work.
