The problem seems to be that once you set an override to disable discovery of an already discovered computer or just remove the enable override for the whole group as you mention , then discovery of that computer doesn't run and so the group membership does not get updated. In these cases, consider a range of possible causes.

Authoring strategies for .NET application monitoring in Operations Manager management pack

You are no longer required to conduct ongoing monitoring when your business relationship with a client ends. There's no actual distribution job to cancel. Select a segment of these charts to drill down to a device list view.

Either way, monitoring will prevent projects from being delayed because of inefficiencies in the field. Forwarding client error reports Client Monitoring The Microsoft Error Reporting MER service collects information about how you use Microsoft programs and about some of the issues you might encounter. Using this data, you can determine how often an operating system or application experiences an error and the number of affected computers and users.

6 Benefits of Employee Monitoring

COM is available and communication from this computer is allowed. When you delete the override, discovery no longer runs for that server, but there appears to be no process to actually remove it from the AD Monitoring Client Computer Group, so it remains enabled for AD Client Monitoring. First we need to make sure new agents are not rejected.
