Soil Survey of Navajo Indian Reservation, San Juan County, Utah

This was not only a Navajo problem, it was true on the majority of Indian reservations across the country.

San Juan County

The schools were highly regimented, patterned after military institutions. There they went through a series of endurance tests to prove that they truly were sons of the Sun.

Official Series Description

Other small groups who had time to prepare were able to survive in remote canyons. Even children have died from the radioactive contamination. Several of the Navajo Indian agents, however, tried to get the federal government to fulfill its obligations.

Soil Surveys by State

Navajo rugs were exchanged to white traders for desired goods and services. It is not known for certain where the Navajos came from before they settled in the Southwest.
