Who was Desiderius Erasmus?

Aldus had, in 1495, set up his printing shop in Venice, which, along with Florence, had blossomed as a publishing centre of Latin and vernacular texts in the final decades of the fifteenth century. Where the monastic manuscript culture operated within a faith-based communalism apart from the larger economy, the age of print introduced a level of commerce into the world of learning still committed to communal use. His second edition 1519 of the Greek text was used by Martin Luther in his German translation of the Bible. Luther had yet to post his 95 Theses. Erasmus took them all on, and devoted much time to the defense of his work.
