FDR and the Holocaust Beir, Robert.

Christian Books, Bibles, Gifts & more.

Five years later Jean Stapleton's tour de force, Eleanor: First Lady of the World, told the story of ER's work as a delegate appointed by Harry Truman to the first United Nations where, as an untiring opponent of communism, she spearheaded the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Not everyone has access to a book the way you do, which is why Better World Books cares. But did FDR fully grasp such complex realities as the Holocaust, the different factions vying for control in China, the world-shattering impact of the atomic bombs, the degree to which a healthy German economy would be necessary for postwar recovery, even public opinion which, he feared, might return to storm-cellar isolationism after the war? Will public interest wane as the generation who knew the Roosevelt presidency firsthand passes from the scene? Editorial Reviews
