In these situations students feel less stressed and more confident in a language learning situation, in part because surface errors do not matter so much. While multimedia offers many opportunities for language learning with the availability of text, images, sound and video as well as interactive activities, the problem is that these opportunities have not been taken advantage of well.

Computer Assisted Language Learning (CALL)

Teachers have moved away from a cognitive view of communicative language teaching to a socio-cognitive view that emphasizes real language use in a meaningful, authentic context. In Revelatory grammar any language item is used to potentiate the target language; then, any text shown by the computer is considered to be meaningful language; and this obviously includes, for example, the instructions given by the computer to install a program -given the fact, obviously, that these instructions are written in English-.

CALL Course Unit 1

Thus, for example, an adventure game in which an enquiry to a witness has to take place can serve to potentiate the practice of past tenses. These included a teacher-central classroom and one-on-one self paced study plus group work.
