City of London Artillery

In 1901 Norfolk Imperial Yeomanry King's Own was formed by expansion of Norfolk squadron of Suffolk Imperial Yeomanry The Duke of York's Own Loyal Suffolk Hussars and in 1905 it was re-named Norfolk Imperial Yeomanry The King's Own Royal Regiment , followed by the Norfolk Yeomanry The King's Own Royal Regiment Dragoons in 1908. The Counter Mortar Battery was developed from the Counter Bombardment organise that the Royal Artillery used already at a Corps level, which was devolved down to work with individual Divisions as needed. In October the brigade was transferred by train to rejoin 58th Division in the area, where it fired its last shots shortly before the Armistice.

Royal Garrison Artillery in the Great War

In 1887, Queen Victoria altered the title of the regiment which was for the future to bear the designation of the Queen's Own Worcestershire Hussars. A good correspondent, his letters to his companions were looked forward to, and although he went through some exceedingly rough experiences, there was always a cheerfull tone running through them.

Royal Garrison Artillery in the Great War

Many of their men were killed, wounded or taken prisoner and almost all of their guns were put out of action.

Royal Artillery Unit Histories

He was one of the fortunate few who returned alive and not physically injured.
