La Suisse a arrêté un agent russe sur son territoire et l'a condamné pour espionnage en janvier. It seeks to explain and constitutive effects in international politics.

International relations theory

The theory argues that liberal democracies have never or almost never made war on one another and have fewer conflicts among themselves. Behaviouralism in international relations theory is an approach to international relations theory which believes in the unity of science, the idea that the social sciences are not fundamentally different from the natural sciences.

Realism, believing as it does in the objectivity of the laws of politics, must also believe in the possibility of developing a rational theory that reflects, however imperfectly and one-sidedly, these objective laws. While there is great diversity within the 'school', much of it involves either examining when and how the different traditions combine or dominate, or focusing on the Rationalist tradition, especially the concept of International Society which is the concept most associated with English School thinking. The same claim to sovereignty was made for both forms of nation-state.
