history of photography

The creation of camera phones means we take photos every day, which makes it hard to realise just how rare photographs were until fairly recently. But as the mirrorless manufacturers are all losing money assuming we're not counting C+N or L there wouldn't be much they could do about it. Although the only example of his camera work that remains today appears to have been made in 1826, his letters leave no doubt that he had succeeded in fixing the camera's image a decade earlier.
