He was not a physiocrat. Abraham Herschel was employed in the royal gardens at Dresden, he received commissions from various quarters on account of his taste and skill as a landscape gardener. D E A R S I R, — I am almost ashamed to write to you, because I never think of doing so but when I am in distress.

. I think of you every day, but always defer writing till the post is just going, and then sometimes business or company, but oftener laziness, hinders me. If it should be agreeable to you to finish his education and mould these excellent materials into a settled character, I make no doubt that he will return to his family and country the very man our fondest hopes have fancied him.

I knew too little English to derive any consolation from the society of those who were about me, so that, dinner-time excepted, I was entirely left to myself. The 3rd of December the Princess returned my books with a kind note, and on the 4th she left Windsor. Beckwith, the niece of Lady Herschel, of whom, as Miss Baldwin, frequent mention has been made.
