They were sitting and lying about on the ground and kindly allowed us to pass on when we told them that we had just made our escape from the enemy. Never put on a serious and grave countenance when the jest is going round, nor affect levity and airiness where gravity is required, for whatever is ill-timed and unseasonable is vexatious. They go to every part of the body, to the eye for sight, to the nose for smell, to the ear for hearing, to the tongue for tasting, to the muscles for motion and to the skin for sensation, or feeling.

Spencer, why did you not let the world know about this before P We are inclined to believe there are two sides to this question. Were it a constant nde, the races of mankind living now would be only the faithful reproduction of races gone by ; TOch uniformity is not, however, the case, because resemblances and aptitudes are not always transmitted.

Now they that look into these examples ought thereby to be spurred up to the practice of what is virtuous, and not be contented with what we have said ; but likewise learn the best things the poets have expressed, and read whatever the wise and learned have writ that is of any use.
