It suffered neglect and in 1972 was deconsecrated with a view to demolish it. Given the provenance documentation, such as it is, from a collector who had other de Wints and the evidence that he painted the subject - where there is none that Robson got near the place- it seems a little strange that an almost passing remark about an affinity to Robson should have taken hold to the apparent degree it has. Turner 1775-1851, Samuel Palmer 1805- 1881 and renowned watercolour artists of their day such as Stoke-born James Holland 1799-1870 and Peter de Wint 1784-1849.
