A Clubbable Woman book by Reginald Hill

The books were adapted to a BBC television series. And perhaps therefore all the more tempting to a detective sergeant who was twenty years younger, had a degree in social sciences and read works of criminology. All the titles are reprints.

A Clubbable Woman by Reginald Hill, Paperback

The Woodcutter was really good, I thought, but this one was really weak. Its throbbing continued in his head somehow and he rubbed his temple, in an effort to dispel the pain.

and A Clubbable Woman (TV Episode 1996)

It is too much of its time for me. His face was not really the face of a fat man, Connie thought, but of a tired saint. When a nasty knock during the match leaves him much too tired to deal with the complexities of his home life, this including his uncommunicative wife, he loses himself to sleep, awakening not long after to find her dead.

and A Clubbable Woman (TV Episode 1996)

Reginald Hill Perished in January 2012 after a few years suffering from a brain tumor.

Order of Dalziel & Pascoe Books

Still at the stage where they were fit rather than kept fit, thought Connon. Inspector Andrew Dalziel and his partner, the callow Sgt. May I see your licence? He pressed hard down on the accelerator and crossed as the amber flicked over to red.

Dalziel & Pascoe

His novels used interesting structures, such as telling the story out of chronological order. Reginald Hill hails from England; he was born in Hartlepool in 1936 to what he often described as ordinary parents. Pascoe in the adaptation is more self-assured and polished than his somewhat immature and girl-obsessed literary counterpart which makes the distinctions between the two main characters far more obvious than they are in the book.

A CLUBBABLE WOMAN

. In this debut novel of the long running series, Pascoe is still a sergeant.
