On its face, this may seem to imply that the Forest Service should apply a purely technocratic decision-making process. Lang suggests: An integrated approach to resource planning must provide for interaction with the stakeholders in the search for relevant information, shared values, consensus, and ultimately, proposed action that is both feasible and acceptable Lang, 1986 p 35. A committee should also be appointed to provide direction to the person or persons held responsible for developing the plan. Public consultation allows and promotes participation, thus avoiding the further issue that can arise when the public is excluded from a decision-making process.

Development Services â€“ Welcome to the City of Fort Worth

Specific goals and objectives should be developed along with a time frame for implementation. The data collected should relate to each of the elements that will make up the plan.
