Residents' perceptions of airport construction impacts: A negativity bias approach

Yet studies of longer term effects were more mixed, showing, for example, that although boys who moved out were less likely to be arrested or convicted for drug offenses than those who stayed, girls who moved were more likely to be convicted of criminal offenses than their peers who stayed. Objectives of the review The objectives of this mixed method including both quantitative and qualitative evidence review are to assess the health and well-being impacts. This approach is particularly useful in reviews of complex intervention effectiveness such as community gardening.
