Court Netherleigh by Mrs Henry Wood

If you had but let me draw that there charge! These started with their load. If you can assure me on your honour it is nothing more than this, well and good.

Court Netherleigh by Mrs Henry Wood

I have lain here, and dwelt incessantly upon the helpless condition of your mother and sisters—left helpless on your hands—should I be called away.

The post I had in London in what you young people are now pleased to call the red-tape office, brought me in six hundred a-year, and we married on that, to rub on as we best could. Hence Frances Chenevix was a general favourite. As true as that we are living, Grubb, if I don't get that in the course of a few hours, I shall be in Queer Street.

Father, this shall ever be their home. On the very day of their marriage, when she, in what appeared to be a fit of petulance, drew down all the blinds of the chariot as they drove away from Lord Acorn's door, and he, taking advantage of the privacy, laid his hand on hers, and bent to whisper a word of love, perhaps to take a kiss from her cheek, she effectually repressed him.

If the original book was published in multiple volumes then this reprint is of only one volume, not the whole set. But I assure you I do not fear it is any serious hurt. I did not like to tell you, and I have had the deuce's own trouble to keep my head above water.
