They were used in earlier times for the production of mortar for building purposes, and sometimes, as during the 18th and 19th centuries, for the production of lime for agricultural purposes. This was all blamed on the carters for over loading the carts, spilling the ore and blocking the gutters. This volume contains an opportunity to see a new collection of pictures of these lost railway lines in action with many nostalgic views of railways destroyed by shortsighted planning.

In the 1851 census there were 40 separate households with 170 inhabitants. Since tourism in the area was discouraged and in many areas forbidden, this had a devastating effect on many rural businesses, who depended on visitors for their income. There were two mines in the Kirkland area — one called the Barbara mine and the other called Bankstead mine but their contribution to the traffic on the line was negligible.
