Infectious Diseases of the Fetus and Newborn Infant

Master the fundamentals of neonatology through the greater emphasis on developmental biology and pathobiology. Weak D occurs in as much as 1% to 3% of the general population, but the majority 90% of weak D individuals types 1, 2, 3 possess a normal D antigen, only produced in lower quantities on the red blood cell surface, and cannot be immunized to make anti-D. Other factors that sometimes contribute are maternal health and toxin exposure, prematurity, labor and delivery complications, genetic disorders, and infections.
