The US Military Is Using Online Gaming to Recruit Teens

Early recruiting has put a lot of pressure on coaches, athletes and parents to push the recruiting timeline forward. Many currently serving in the military will eventually have the opportunity to receive financial benefits for college after their service, as many do not graduate college prior to enlisting. Instead of approaching a recruiter behind a table in a school cafeteria, kids can hang out with one who is playing their favorite video games and replying to their chat messages for hours on end.

NITI Aayog Invites Applications To Recruit Young Professionals

For example, Mott MacDonald, a Vancouver-based engineering firm, has created an 18-month Horizons program to help young professionals identify their development needs and to provide tools to manage their careers in meaningful ways.
