Strategies for Defending ADA Accessibility “Tester” Lawsuits

Even if you only sell or distribute the product, you could still be liable depending on the circumstances. New cases continue to be filed weekly, sometimes daily.

The more photographs, the better. To select the right attorney, make a list of with the right background, experience, and knowledge. This might include putting up barriers, locking doors, etc.

Strategies for Defending ADA Accessibility “Tester” Lawsuits

Intangible property, such as digital data, would not be covered. Falls are a common cause of back and hip injuries, which might include herniated disks or fractures that never heal quite right. Now, however, we have the benefit of 15 months of procedural history in these tester cases to teach us what works, what doesn't work, and why.

Liability Insurance

The owner has a duty to warn the licensee of any dangerous conditions on the property known to the owner but not known to the licensee holes in the ground, loose steps, sharp objects, etc. The owner could likely argue that the plaintiff assumed the risks of visiting a haunted house. Lastly, if scorched earth is your preference, consider filing a counterclaim against the plaintiff.

Defenses To Premises Liability

For example, a business that manufactures or distributes power tools is at a greater risk of being sued than one that distributes towels and would therefore need more liability insurance.

Defenses To Premises Liability

For example, while Texas law holds landlords responsible for the condition of the rental when they turn it over to tenants, the tenant generally assumes responsibility for injuries that occur to visitors of the rental unit thereafter.

LegalMatch

You can usually get a good sense of lawsuits involving your type of business through your trade association.
