In other words, we have an inner sense of the divine which we might experience in nature, in art, in a loving relationship, or in periods of deep reflection. The book combines an original theoretical framework with research drawn from interviews with sixty Catholic secondary head teachers from deprived urban areas.

The former is not an easy endeavor as the field is colored by a plethora of interpretations and misconceptions of what really was, is and indeed, what is becoming Catholic education. Whether their adult lives are private or public, we want them to live that life to the full and to help create a better world, one which is more in tune with the values of Jesus Christ. Jesus reveals a God who is compassionate, forgiving and gentle, whose very nature is love and who urges us to live in love and to build up a kingdom of love.

Since coming to Villanova in 1991, where he earned the rank of Associate Professor in 1996 and tenure in 1998, Jacobs has also studied higher educational administration during the 1996 and 1997 academic years as Assistant to the President of Merrimack College in North Andover, Massachusetts. At a time when the British government favours an increase in the number of faith-based schools, this book has much contemporary relevance for educational, political and policy debates. Religious Education will be taught in a Catholic school but will cover other religions as well as Catholicism and will focus on transmitting knowledge and understanding of religion in a spirit of age-appropriate critical thinking, and will not impart a one-sided outlook.

What is Distinctive About a Catholic School?

All human beings have a divine seed within them, they are loved by God, and that belief informs how we go about the business of education.
